

Game for DOME

First, read the two stories and have the children act them out.

Story 1

- Captain
- Child
- Crew
- Passengers
- Watch man

In 1956, Father Kentenich told this story to the couples. We have to trust in God, our father, as much as this child trusted his father.

A story is told about a terrible storm at sea. The ship is being tossed about by the waves. Everyone, passengers as well as the crew, are very frightened, and there was confusion all over the ship. Someone noticed a little child, sitting very calmly, playing, and seemingly without fear. The child was asked if he did not know what was happening, and perhaps they all would be lost. The child answered, "No, I am not the least afraid because my father is at the helm. He is the captain of the ship; he is steering the ship."

Story 2

- King
- fool of the king's court
- courtiers
- teacher
- children

In 1956, Father Kentenich also told this story to the couples. He wanted to tell that it is not enough with learning things with our minds. We also need to practice what we learn. Our lives should show what we have learned.

A story is told about a fool at a king's court, a so-called court jester. He was not dumb; on the contrary, he was very wise. It was his task to entertain the king and his courtiers. In a humorous manner, the court jester used to tell the truth to the king, also including his faults.

One day, he asked the question, "What is better, to learn what you do not yet know, or to do what you know?" After a long discussion, the answer was, "It is better to practice first what you know, and then later to learn what you don't know."
